Muy frecuentemente la policía, particularmente en casos de narcóticos, embarga dinero, automóviles, o bienes raíces. Si el allanamiento resulta ilegal, o si la conexión entre el embargo de la propiedad y el delito acusado no es suficiente, el abogado defensor intentará procurar que devuelvan los bienes al dueño.

Esta petición para la devolución de propiedad se encuentra redactada en Pennsylvania Rules of Criminal Procedure 588 y puede combinarse con una petición para suprimir evidencia bajo Pennsylvania Rules of Criminal Procedure 581. El estándar de prueba para ambos el Estado y el acusado es la preponderancia de la evidencia ya que este procedimiento es parecido a un caso civil. Hay leyes especiales que rigen la pérdida de bienes bajo las leyes de deportes, 34 Purdon's Pennsylvania Consolidated Statutes Annotated §928, artefactos de tahurería, 18 Purdon's Pennsylvania Consolidated Statutes Annotated § 5513, y diversos otros. Claramente, si la evidencia tomada es narcóticos o cualquier otro tipo de contrabando, el dueño no intentará recuperarlo debido que el hacerlo sería reconocimiento de culpa. En casos penales los decomisos se están convirtiendo en cosa común.
